From the beginning of their interface with the United Nations in the early 1980s, Indigenous peoples have recounted numerous stories about contemporary conflicts that ravage their lands and communities, resulting in massacres, rape and other gross violations of human rights, including forced conscription to the army and militia, heavy militarization of their areas, destruction of their cultural heritage, outright settlement of their lands, displacement and deprivation of their means of livelihood. Many of those situations often go unreported, ignored by mainstream media and pushed into political invisibility or trivialized by states and non-state actors, such as corporations. The uniqueness of the historical experience of Indigenous peoples creates many blind spots in the mainstream and areas of urgent investigation for scholars and advocates. In other situations efforts towards peace agreements or similar arrangements have been made, but the gaps of implementation remain.

What are the forms of violence specific to indigenous peoples? Are there forms that do not express themselves in physical violence? Are there specific causes for conflicts affecting Indigenous peoples? What can we learn from case studies?

Can existing norms and policies for dealing with conflict apply to Indigenous peoples?
What is the international normative framework applicable to conflict affecting Indigenous peoples and its resolution? Has the adoption of the UN Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples had an impact on conflict resolution and peace solutions?

Should Indigenous peoples-related conflicts be handled differently from other so-called “ethnic conflicts”?

What gaps must be addressed in terms of national and international mechanisms for the prevention of atrocities and the promotion of peace in cases where Indigenous peoples are involved?

What is the human rights approach and response to the deliberate destruction of cultural heritage of Indigenous peoples?

How could existing mechanisms of conflict resolution, national and international, be improved as regards Indigenous peoples?

What can be learned from efforts of conflict resolution involving Indigenous peoples, including peace agreements and a gender perspective, in different parts of the world? Case studies and regional perspectives will address these questions.

What are the opportunities we can seize to make progress in this area and what recommendations can we make to various parties?
